Quincy, known as Illinois' "Gem City," is the county seat of Adams County, Illinois, located on the Mississippi River.

During the 19th Century, Quincy was a thriving transportation center as riverboats and rail service linked the city to many destinations west and along the river. It was once Illinois' second-largest city, surpassing Peoria in 1870. The city holds several historic districts, including the Downtown Quincy Historic District and the South Side German Historic District showcasing the architecture of Quincy's many German immigrants from the late-19th Century. Today, Quincy is a home rule city with a Council/Mayor form of government. This growing rural community operates under a sophisticated and comprehensive development plan and is a full-service city.

Quincy continues to invest in community improvements. The City of Quincy has released a preliminary list of roads it wants to improve as part of its capital improvement plan; thirty seven projects totaling over $19 million for numerous street improvements. Blessing Health System, the largest area employer, includes a new $70M patient care addition. Other leading employers include Quincy Public Schools, Titan International, Blue Cross Blue Shield, Knapheide Manufacturers, Quincy Medical Group, Quincy University and John Wood Community College.

Quincy is also home to a diverse education system, including both public and parochial elementary and secondary schools, technical schools, a community college (John Wood Community College: 1,924 enrollment), and a private four-year university (Quincy University: 1,098 students), that has placed #36 in Best Colleges: Regional Colleges Midwest according to US News & World Report.
