ABOUT CREVE COEUR

Creve Coeur is a premier community for business in the St. Louis Area because of its central location, amenities and high quality of life. Interstate 270, Interstate 64, Olive Boulevard and Lindbergh Boulevard connect Creve Coeur to the greater St. Louis Metropolitan Area. St. Louis Lambert International Airport is less than 12 mile drive from the heart of the City.

Creve Coeur is a key node for technology, life sciences and health services in St. Louis. The city is home to Bayer Crop Science Division Headquarters, the Nidus Center for Scientific Enterprise and the Donald Danforth Plant Center. Eight of the 25 largest IT consulting firms, two of the largest banks, two of the largest international companies in the St. Louis Metropolitan Area are located in Creve Coeur.

ABOUT OLIA VILLAGE

POSITIONING STATEMENT

Set within the rolling hills of Creve Coeur, Olia Village is a sophisticated urban locale with boundless experience. The juxtaposition of eclectic restaurants, peaceful trails, innovative businesses and upscale residences within a natural landscape embodies the best life can offer. Explore a community rich with art, culture and enthusiasm within the heart of Creve Coeur.

ABOUT THE NAME

The name Olia Village originated from two sources, Olea, the genus of Olive trees and Olga Monsanto, wife of Monsanto founder John Queeny. Olga means “holy” in Russian and “hearty and holy” in its diminutive form, Olya. The modern Anglo-American spelling of Olya is Olia, meaning “blessed, holy, olive tree,” which elegantly encapsulates the nature-forward development and pays homage to the area’s significant history. “Village” appropriately defines the sustainable and autonomous community created within the bustling St. Louis Metropolitan Area.
